The goal of this chapter is to learn how to plan and conduct a Production Process Characterization Study (PPC) on manufacturing processes. We will learn how to model manufacturing processes and use these models to design a data collection scheme and to guide data analysis activities. We will look in detail at how to analyze the data collected in characterization studies and how to interpret and report the results.

Direct or explicit characterization. Direct characterization occurs when the writer simply tells the reader something about a character. In the above example, when you describe what your friend's potential date looks like or what he does (he's got long hair; he's in a band), that's direct characterization.
