If you're wondering how to talk so teens will listen, this is it. The autonomy-supportive tone encourages and supports the listener. It helps children learn to have an internal locus of control—to know that they are in control of their actions. Instead of blaming others for their choices, they accept responsibility.

Instead, stick with the facts: “I know you disagree with the rules, and you’d rather not listen to me. The truth is, you don’t have to like the rules—you just have to find a way to follow them.”.

Remember, keep your cool, stay focused on the issue at hand and don’t let your child knock you off topic.

Show respect for your teen's opinions.

Teenagers can be surprisingly easy to talk with if the parents make it clear that they're listening to the teen's point of view.

Keep it short and simple.
