The U.S. fund industry is relatively diversified: Maybe the biggest category that sticks out from this chart is how much cash resides in money markets. John Bogle talked about the importance of money markets in his last book. These cash equivalent funds were basically non-existent until the early 1980s. During that decade mutual fund assets in total went from $241 billion to $1.45 trillion. A huge chunk of that growth came from money market funds, which went from $2 billion to $370 billion ...
