The Story of the World is a very popular history curriculum in Christian homeschool circles and co-ops. My husband and I originally wanted to look into Mystery of History, but at the time (our oldest was 6) some other more experienced moms advised that it might be better to wait a few years because it was a bit more rigorous than we probably needed right away.

Why We're Ditching Story of the World - Proverbial Homemaker

I've had my issues with Story of the World, but the fact that there's nothing quite like it for American history is a problem that seems to plague a lot of homeschoolers, who, like me, want to devote a full year or even two to the history of the United States. It's much easier to find other resources like picture books, biographies, posters, games, flashcards and things like that for US ...
